Doubt Is Cast @ On Future of A-340 Jetliner

By Warten Getler and Axel Krause ul Herald Tribani

LONDON - The designers of a high technology jet engine that would have powered Airbus Industrie's proposed A-340 aircraft voted Tuesday to shelve the project, throwing the future of the plane itself into doubt.

The company, International Aero Engines, a consortium of U.S., British, Japanese, West German and Italian engine makers, aid it could not meet a 1992 deadline for its new "SuperFan" V-2500 engine, the power plant that had attracted many potential customers to the long-haul Airbus plane.

IAE, citing the "technical risks involved in trying to meet an early 1992 in-service deadline," said it would rather shelve the project than rush it through. A spokesman said the consortium would continue engineering studies on the $1.5 billion project that could still lead to a decision to build the engine at a later date.

IAE and Airbus signed a memorandum of understanding last December that provided for certification and delivery of the SuperFan by the planned May 1992 delivery date of the A-340 aircraft.

"The SuperFan concept itself is not in question," an IAE member said. "All we are saying is that the viability at the moment is in ques-

Soviet Is Said to Alter Position on Test Ban

By Michael R. Gordon New York Time: Serve WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union has offered to postpone its demand for a total nuclear test ban and to concentrate first on new testing limitations, according to U.S. officials.

Under a new approach outlined to American officials last month, Moscow now seems ready to treat a complete test ban as an ultimate goal and to work initially toward ratification of two existing test-limitation treaties of the 1970s and seek additional limits on the number and size of tests.

The Soviet Union said Tuesday that it is simultaneously seeking talks with Washington on a total nuclear test ban and on limiting the size of nuclear tests, United Press International reported from Moscow, "Our position has not changed at all," the Foreign Minis-try spokesman, Gennadi I. Gerasi-

With Secretary of State George P. Shultz due to leave Saturday for talks in Moscow, the Soviet offer has been the subject of debate within the administration of President Ronald Reagan, officials said.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev has been stressing the need for a total test ban without going through the intermediate limitations. The United States contends that testing is needed as long as there are nuclear weapons, and has favored additional verification measures to make it possible to ratify the two treaties of the 1970s, which limit tests to 150 kilotons, to be followed by discussions on additional limits leading ultimately to a total ban. Officials of the State Department and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency have been urging a flexible response to the latest Soviet offer. The Defense Department insists that the Soviet Union first agree to the additional verification measures under the treaties of the 1970s before other testing issues can be taken up. The debate over nuclear testing has been part of larger discussion over arms control issues as Mr. Shultz gets ready to leave.

The administration also has been debating whether to modify its currem proposals in the Geneva arms talks on the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty and on the pace of reduction of long-range, or strategic, nuclear weapons.

On the testing issue, the administration is debating the meaning of a statement made March 19 in Geneva by Andronik M. Petrosyanis, chairman of the Soviet State Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy.

In the past, the United States has proposed a three-step approach. First, the Soviet Union would have to agree to the additional verification measures for the treaties of the 1970s, setting a 150-kiloton limit on both nuclear weapons testing and on peaceful engineering explosions. Second, after the treaties are ratified, the two sides would consider additional measures to limit testing. Third, the two sides would ultimately work toward a total ban. On the second phase, the United

China's Road to Change Suddenly Turns Bumpy

BELIING - China once seemed to illustrate how far a Communist country could go in transforming its economy and politics. But with the abrupt removal of its Communist Party chief in January, this vast nation of more than a billion people now appears to dramatize the barriers to change

The forced resignation of Hu Yaobang, head of China's roughly 40-million-member Communist Party, holds lessons for Communist parties around the world. Within the party, the ebuilient Mr. Hu was the most orceful proponent of change.

Congressmen, U.S. Protests In Moscow, Find 'Flaws'

By Bill Keller

New York Times Service MOSCOW -- The two members of Congress who came to Moscow to investigate security at the U.S. Embassy have described security equipment and practices at the embassy as "fundamentally flawed."

The security arrangements are used to control access to the most sensitive areas of all U.S. diplomatic missions where classified information is handled. They include an alarm system that the representative said can be completely disarmed by two people.

The visit by Representative Daniel A. Mica, Democrat of Florida, and Representative Olympia J. Snowe, Republican of Maine, resulted from the widening investigation of former embassy Marine guards, two of whom have been charged with allowing Soviet agents to roam the most sensitive areas of the embassy.

In a preliminary report, Representatives Mica and Snowe said that senior diplomats at the embassy had resisted enforcement of security measures and permitted a lax attitude toward secrecy to pervade the staff.

The lawmakers spent two days exploring the embassy and interviewing personnel as part of an investigation for the House subcomminee responsible for embassy security. Mr. Mica is the chairman of that subcommittee, and Miss Snowe is the senior Republican.

The congressmen said embassy records showed that Marine guards had cited 137 security violations by embassy personnel, including leaving safes open and allowing classified documents to remain unat-

Long-Idle Boxer Accomplishes 'Impossible Task'

By Sally Jenkins Washington Past Service

LAS VEGAS - Never, ever, was this supposed to happen. Sugar Ray Leonard danced, bounced and chattered his way to a historymaking middleweight championship Monday night, defeating Marvelous Marvin Hagler by split decision in the backyard of Caesars Palace

Call it controversial, call it arguable, but it was the richest, gaudiest prizelight in history, and will also be remembered as one of the most glorious.

Leonard, the slim-shouldered corporate boxer who resigned the 147-pound (66.6-kilogram) welterweight title five years ago, was attempting to make improbable history by claiming the World Boxing Council 160-pound championship from the brutish titleholder of nearly seven years' standing.
At the end, with both men having stayed on their feet throughout 12 hard-fought rounds, the decision was disputable. "It's all politics," said Hagler. "It puts a terrible feeling in my mouth for boxing. It puts a bitter taste in my mouth. . . . I feel in my heart I'm still the (Hagler outweighed him by a half-pound). More than that, no champion had ever successfully returned to the ring following an injury as devastating as Leonard's partially detached retina in his left eye suffered in 1982. "Everyone called it an impossible task," Leonard said. But in choosing to fight again, he may have proved that there is a compulsive gambler in everyone. To Form a New Party By Clyde Haberman inevitable, I think." New York Times Service TOKYO - South Korea's main opposition party reached the point of collapse Tuesday night as its two dominant figures planned to break away and form a new political party of their own.

The two leaders, Kim Dae Jung and Kim Young Sam, called a news conference for Wednesday to announce their split with the New Korea Democratic Party.

In a telephone interview from Seoul on Tuesday night, Kim Dae Jung said he expected to be joined by about 70 of the party's 90 National Assembly members.

The action was needed, Mr. Kim said, to end a "paralysis" in the opposition camp brought on by politicians whom he described as 'impure elements." With a new party." he said, "af-certain to further weaken an opposition camp that already was in severe disarray and on the defensive at a critical political moment. Internal fractiousness has reached a crisis point in recent days. Last weekend, a brawl inside party headquarters led to two politicians being hospitalized with injuries. For nearly a year, the New Korea Democrats have been locked in a tense struggle with the ruling Democratic Justice Party over how to change the constitutional process of selecting a national leader after President Chun Doo Hwan's term ends next February.

While the opposition insists on direct presidential elections, Mr. Chun's backers call for an indirect cabinet system headed by a prime minister. With time for a settlement running short, the two sides are far apart. In fact, they have held no substantive discussions, and now the chances for compromise seem slimmer than ever.

"It certainly looks that way." said Hong Sa Duk, until recently the official New Korea Democratic spokesman. Forming a new party, he said, was "really not a good

'Violation of Sovereignty' By Lou Cannon

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan said Tuesday that he would not allow the U.S. diplomatic mission in Moscow to occupy its new embassy there until he could be assured that security concerns about the building had been resolved. Mr. Reagan also said that the Soviet Union would not be allowed to occupy an embassy being built in Washington until the United States was able to move into new quarters in Moscow.

The president spoke just two hours after Jack F. Matlock, the new U.S. ambassador in Moscow. delivered a formal protest to Soviet officials alleging a "violation of sovereignty" at the embassy. Referring to charges of Soviet eavesdropping on U.S. diplomats in the present embassy building, Mr. Reagan said: "The United States will not occupy our new embassy in Moscow unless and until I can be assured that it is safe to move into a secure embassy environment." "I'm deeply concerned over the breach of security in our Moscow embassy." Mr. Reagan said. "While all the facts are not known, it is clear that the security implications are widespread and that additional quick action is required to prevent further damage to our national security." Two Marines who served as guards at the embassy have been charged with espionage. They allegedly became sexually involved with Soviet women and allowed Soviet intelligence agents into sensi-tive areas of the building. The president announced a set of inquiries into embassy security in Moscow and other diplomatic thissions abroad. He said he was asking his Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board to "evaluate the condition of our new building and ascertain whether it will ever be secure or whether it may be necessary to destroy and rebuild it." He said the board would report within 90 days.

In Surprise for Canada, Reagan Vows to Consider An Accord on Acid Rain our shared international waters." Such an agreement on acid rain, patterned after the accord by which the two nations monitor water quality in the Great Lakes, would fall short of a treaty. But it goes further than Mr. Reagan had gone before on the acid rain issue.

People who are successful in business today are making double or even triple their ages in thousands of dollars, according to the Research Institute of America, a tax and business research firm.

As quoted by Debra Whitfield in The Washington Post, the institute says you should be making at least $100,000 a year by the time you are 40. And even that hardly compares with the investment bankers and takeover awyers who may be making $500,000 a year before they turn tains a chamber specially secured against Soviet eavesdropping. But even this bugproof bubble may not be secure enough for use by Secretary of State George Shultz during his forthcoming visit to Moscow. The Marine Corps guards who let the KGB roam the embassy may have compromised almost everything done there. And the continuing revelations are only the latest of many damaging security breaches.

The sobering lesson is that too many people in positions of trust are willing to betray secrets, and government is unwilling to take adequate countermeasures.

The usual lures of greed or sex seem to have been the motive in the marine cases. What is new is the extent of this appalling activity — 26 espionage convictions in the last three years. Much of the damage could have been prevented by simple precautions like more screening, changing partners in protected areas, or altering routines. It would not have taken a genius, only attention and good sense, to have averted the marines' dereliction and some of the other disasters.

• The spy ring run by John Walker sold the technical manuals for the navy's cipher machines and key cards. These probably enabled Moscow to decipher millions of messages over 17 years until 1985, leaving the navy essentially naked to Soviet view. The theft, in the navy's estimation, "created powerful war-winning implications for the Soviet side." It also afforded such complete knowledge of U.S. cryptography and communications that the security of all except totally new systems may be open to doubt.

• Ronald Pelton, a 14-year veteran of the National Security Agency, betrayed an intelligence collection project to Soviet agents

The American Embassy in Moscow con- and probably his knowledge of the 57 main Soviet communications signals that the agency tries to intercept, one of which was at the highest level of the Soviet government.

· Edward Howard was trained by the CIA to service agents in Moscow. Fired before taking up his post, he defected, probably compromising operations in Moscow.

The cumulative damage, noted a Senate Intelligence Committee report last October, was immense and "far greater than anyone in the U.S. government has yet acknowledged publicly." Despite the damage, and specific warning in 1985 of the Moscow embassy's vulnerability, the State Department took no adequate steps to improve its security.

Does Washington take security seriously enough? By trying to guard too many secrets, it has kept far too few. If the navy could not protect its precious cipher machines, what could its security system do? Why did the National Security Agency allow one low-paid employee such wide knowledge? How could the CIA overlook something obvious like Mr. Howard's instability before teaching him the workings of its Moscow station?

The blame for these breaches lies not principally with the agencies but with the spies themselves. To judge by arrests, there have been more traitors than at any time since World War II. Spies then had reasons of ideology. Today's seem to commit their acts of betrayal casually and for cash. People are selling out easily.

The administration has begun to prosecute spies more vigorously, which in part explains the greater number of cases in public view. But as each chilling new breach becomes apparent, it is hard to see what lessons have been truly learned.

Childbirth Often Kills

For women in the developing world the tality rate — a goal recently, and commend-ably, set by the World Bank — depends heavily on birth control and health care services. Sadly, in the last three years the U.S. government's commitment to this noble cause has continued to diminish.

Ideally, women ought to bear children between the ages of 18 and 35, probably have no more than four and space them two years apart. For a woman in Kenya, say, or in Bangladesh, the ideal is far off; childbearing often begins with puberty and ends with menopause, assuming that the woman lives till menopause. Women in poorer countries may be 100 times more apt to die in pregnancy or childbirth. A quarter of the deaths that occur before term are the result of illegal abortions.

An estimated 500,000 pregnant women die each year. At a recent conference in Kenya, the World Bank launched a campaign to cut that in half by the year 2000. Barber Conable, the bank's president, most worrying question about pregnancy is . Fund. "Sometimes." he said, "we forget that development is the work of women as end my life?" Reducing this maternal morwell as men ... that they are the sustaining well as men ... that they are the sustaining force of families, communities, nations."

Safe motherhood requires access to family planning services and safe abortion, both of which the Reagan administration insists on making cruelly difficult for the world's poor. In 1984, at the World Population Conference in Mexico City, the United States said it wanted to cut off funds to any agencies that so much as mentioned abortion, even if they used no U.S. funds for abortion-related activities. As a result, the U.S. Agency for International Development withdrew support for the UN Fund for Population Activities and for the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the primary global network for family planning programs.

In bringing the world's attention to those 500,000 maternal deaths, the World Bank shows welcome concern for what Mr. Conable calls "the growth that comes from the bottom up." Would that the Reagan administration could show similar understanding.

in announcing his candidacy for president on Monday. He adds - echoing Ronald Reagan's impatience with those who ask Americans to lower their sights and trim expectations -- that "there are no limits to our future if we don't put limits on our people." We like Mr. Kemp's optimistic, can-do approach. But we believe that the solutions he has come up with for the big problems of our time are among the worst ideas being offered by anyone.

Give candidate Kemp credit, nonetheless, for risking public positions that may prove unpopular. He calls for a "strategy for victory" and "support for the legitimacy of freedom-lighter movements around the world," meaning in particular the Nicaraguan contras, a cause not currently very popular with voters. He calls for "once again, an honest dollar, a dollar as good as gold" — by which he means a return to the gold standard, a truly awful idea.

Equally awful is the supply-side fantasy that he continues doggedly to uphold. "More growth, more jobs, lower interest rates and less government spending" are all desirable aims, but they will not do what he says they will - balance the budget.

Mr. Kemp oversimplifies when he says that there is no "way to protect" the United States without the Strategic Defense Initia-

He is admirably forthright in opposing protectionism when other politicians smell votes in it; in that, at least, we think he is right.

In a memorable article not long ago, David Broder likened Jack Kemp to Hubert Humphrey, not, God knows, for any affinity of views but rather as a font of ideas for the slice of political life he represents, for his irrepressible enthusiasm and hearty gift for friendship. So far his political campaign is said to have been a slow starter. He has intense support - the crowds at Republican conventions love him - but it may be limited support, the kind that gets you "beloved" status but no cigar. Maybe his strength is being underplayed now by all those politicians who say it is Robert Dole whom George Bush has to defeat and who seem to be regarding Jack Kemp as a damp match that can't be lit. If Mr. Kemp proves them wrong as he goes about the business of making himself better known in Michigan, Iowa, New Hampshire, the South and the rest of the country, he will be in a real argument - and at that point his more extreme ideas and his unpersuasive arithmetic are almost bound to become an issue. — THE WASHINGTON POST.

For a Middle Road on Trade

There certainly are problems of fairness in international trade, but protectionism and bilateral agreements to restrict exports are not the answer. Because these arrangements delay needed economic restructuring, their ultimate victims are the very countries they were supposed to protect. Competition can only be beneficial when free from artificial restraints. The American concept of free trade is defensive and rooted in a bilateral mentality; that of GATT is offensive and multilaterally oriented. If GATT is to regain its role as an international legal framework for trade, it must pursue a multilateral, nondiscriminatory orientation based on the reciprocity of rights and obligations.

Japan and the West: Causes and Goals Are Mutual

PARIS — There was a time when Western views were generally considered right by the Japanese and Western suggestions were found con-vincing. But a rapidly changing and more sophisticated Japan, and a more complex and interdependent world, no longer allow stereotypical rguments to remain credible.

The present situation can be better understood, and more constructive dialogue becomes possible, if these three terms are kept in mind: mutuality, relativity and generality.

First, mutuality.
The following line of argument lies at the core of much Western opinion: "The Japanese are not only dumping overproduction abroad, but are also exporting excessive savings in order to enable others to buy their products." The fallacy here is that an elementary fact of economic life is ignored: It takes two to make an

A willing seller or lender cannot complete a transaction without an equally willing buyer or borrower. An economic phenomenon is determined by both sides of the market, based on mutual interests. A trade account need not balance all the time in the dynamic world, since it is financed by offsetting international capital flows. Those who adhere to the above line of argument should accept the following as well: "The United States is sucking economic transaction.

By Shoichi Kojima capital from Japan to finance its appetite for Japanese products."

The reality is that America and Japan nowadays rely on each other's complementary characteristics: Japa-nese are sen-yu, ko-raku (worry first, enjoy later), while Americans are senraku, ko-yu (enjoy first, worry later). The American consumer wants quick satisfaction through his own or government spending; the American company wants quick profits. The Japanese consumer prepares for future spending; the Japanese company cares about strengthening its compet-itiveness in the long run. No value judgment is possible as to which is better, but if problems exist, the causes must be sought on both sides. Second, relativity. Even those who understand mutuality often insist on the egocentric assumption that the West sets absolute standards, any deviation from which should be corrected. The idea that Japan's savings rate is too high and its import propensity too low is an example. On the contrary, one could argue that America's savings their consequences. If the relative dif-ference is the problem, again the cause must be sought on both sides.

The same can be said about Westem criticism of the quickening pace of innovation in Japanese industry, as witnessed by the widespread use of robotics in production lines or the flourishing of consumer electronic products. As the economist Joseph Schumpeter pointed out more than 50 years ago, it is inevitable that a successful entrepreneur will quickly notice an opportunity to make a profit and will fill this vacuum with new products, or the application of new production methods, rendering what preceded obsolete. Entrepreneurs who are slower to "take off" should be stimulated by those who are faster.

Third, generality. The Western obsession with finding the "secret" of Japanese behavior leads to wrong thinking whereby general economic phenomena are erroneously seen as specifically Japanese. A typical example is the argument that "Japanese manufacturers are reducing their profit margins to mainrate is too low and its import propen-sity too high. There is no absolutely uncertainty of floating exchange uncertainty of floating exchange correct savings rate or propensity to rates requires any business of any import. We are simply observing dif-nationality to use profit margins as a ferences in these parameters between buffer to keep its activities as stable bune. The opinions expressed are his own, the United States and Japan, and as possible. Indeed, U.S. firms are not those of the Japanese government.

If these three checkpoints are kept m mind, a more constructive dialogue, aimed at economic ranonality, should be possible. Japan's "sen-yu, ko-raku" and America's "sen-raku, ko-yu" are rational only if Japanese actually start enjoying higher living standards and Americans actually begin to worry about their debts. This requires change consumer attitudes and corporate behavior on both sides. To act otherwise is economically irrational and would be interpreted by foreign ex-change markets as "unsustainable." The cooperative approach now being implemented by industrial countries points in the right direction. There is a danger, though, that each country will urge the others to act first, without reciprocating. Also, vested interests will try to prevent economically rational changes and will demand irra-tional decisions. U.S. protectionism is a foremost threat in this regard.

Still, rationality should eventually prevail. The recent situation only strengthens the case for decisive commitment to a cooperative approach, in the service of mutual interests.

Both Roads Are Better * Left Untaken

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON - Not for the first time, the Reagan administration is squaring off for a light against the wrong adversaries, with the wrong arguments, in its efforts to win another $105 million in military and economic aid for the contras.

Unless the new team members at the White House can somehow talk him out of it, the president will once again be taking the familiar highroad/low-road approach.

The high road is an appeal for bipartisanship, and soothing assurances that every effort will be made to get the Nicaraguan rebels to clean up their act. The low road is what some call the "precipice" strategy: a no-compromise approach that threatens any uncooperative Democrat with having to take responsibility for all manner of awful consequences.

For a sample, listen to Fred Ide, undersecretary of defense for policy. and a prominent force in shaping Central American policy.

If aid to the contras is cut off, he said recently, Nicaragna will become another Cuba, and "a massive U.S. investment and a large presence of U.S. forces" will be needed in neighboring countries. Mr. Ikle said this would cost $7 billion to $9 billion a year. "Inevitably, Americans would get killed. Reminds you of Indochina in the early 1960s, doesn't it?"
Not much. Mr. Ikle's horror story is unpersuasive because too many Americans do remember Vietnam - not to mention the point that the analogy in no way fits. Such scare talk may have worked just enough in 1986, a congressional election year, to help win nar-row passage of $100 million in military and economic assistance. But neither the low road nor the high road is likely to work next time around. One reason is the assorted scandals over illicit efforts to slip profits from arms sales to Iran, and other dubious funds, to the contras in plain defiance of the Congress.

A more important reason is that decisive opposition, especially in the Senate, is likely to emerge this time around. It will come from a select coalition of Republicans and Democrats, who were at pains to "paper the case" against the administration's policy even before the Iran-contra mess began coming to fight. In March 1986, in the midst of the debate over contra aid, Sam Nunn, the prestigious Georgia Democrat who is now chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, wrote the president a long letter, setting stiff condi-tions for his support of the administration program. Among them were reforms of the contra movement to ensure civilian control and democratic principles, strict accounting of U.S. aid, vigorous enforcement of respect for human rights by the resistance forces, and an end to drug trafficking.

Mr. Nunn read into the record a reply from Mr. Reagan accepting the conditions and pledging a bipartisan approach. Three leading Republicans, William Cohen of Maine, Nan-# cy Kassebaum of Kansas and Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, had a similar exchange of correspondence with the president. In a colloquy on the Senate floor, Mr. Nunn and Mr. Cohen agreed that when this year's $105 million request comes to a vote, "there will be no more debates in a vacuum.... Either they move in this direction or this will not be a program sustainable by the United States."

Recently, Mr. Cohen, Mrs. Kassebaum and Mr. Rudman sent Mr. Reagan a pointed and detailed reminder of their conditions, with emphasis on a more intense pursuit of a diplomatic solution. Noting their past support of the aid measures, they stressed that aid to the contras can be only "one element of a multi-track policy," including urgent and generous economic assistance to shore up Nicaragua's neighbors. These factors will bear beavily on our position regarding future requests for assistance to the contras," the letter concluded. Now those may not sound like fighting words. But that is the point: Neither Mr. Nunn nor the three Republicans are looking for a fight. On the contrary, they are the hard core of a group of like-minded "centrists" who are working behind the scenes with key administration officials in an effort to reach an accommodation. Last year, their four votes were enough to tip the outcome (52-48) in favor of the president. This year — with the civilian contra leadership unreformed and in a state of collapse; with no visible administration enthusiasm for diplomacy; and with millions of dollars of legal and illegal contra funding unaccounted for — my sense of it is that it will take much more than hollow presidential promises to hold their support.

MEDFORD, Massachusetts — As Pope John Paul II arrived in Santiago last week, a young doctor awaited trial in a prison cell downtown, accused of terrorism. His supposed crime is treating a man with a bullet injury. His real "crime" is that he is medical director of Vicaria, the human rights arm of the Roman Catholic Church in the Chilean capital.

On Jan. 26, I waited in the hot, crowded corridor outside a chamber of the Chilean Supreme Court, Several Chilean reporters approached with questions. I explained that I represented a U.S. organization, Physicians for Human Rights. I was in Santiago at the request of Vicaria and the Chilean Medical Association because the Chilean government had arrested and sought to charge three doctors and a lawyer, the defendants of this hearing. under anti-terrorist laws.

The defendants had cared for a wounded man who the government later said was a terrorist. I had met with the doctors and others involved in the case. Vicaria and the medical association were convinced that these professionals had been following their codes of ethics, which state that doctors must aid the sick or injured regardless of political considerations. Physicians for Human Rights was troubled by such state persecution of professionals fulfilling their duties.

I began to explain that ethical codes govern and humanize medicine, and I mentioned the horrors that result when such codes are neglected - horrors such as those perpetrated by the Nazi doctors. The reporters, intent at first, now stopped writing. Plainly embarrassed, one of them explained: "We can't publish that. The papers are controlled." By Jane Green Schaller been imprisoned for six months); and Dr. Juan Macaya, a veteran in pediatrics and public health, who had been in jail for eight months. The third of a number of people I met whose doctor, Ramon Rojas, was free on family members had been detained as bail and sat in front of me.

There was little sense of hope in the stifling air of the chambers. Only lawyers were allowed to address the five ustices and one military general who sat to hear the case. There were no wituesses, no cross-examinations. Three Vicaria lawyers spoke eloquently, citing the ethics codes and professional duties of doctors and lawyers. Two prosecutors spoke brutally for the government, trying to link the defendants and Vicaria to terrorism. Their silent witnesses included Dr. Aleiandro Aravena, whose confession was cited as evidence against the Vicaria. But he could not be questioned: he was in prison. After four hours, the court adjourned.

The next day, as I emerged from an appointment, a sad but handsome woman thrust several handwritten pages of notes into my hands. She was Dr. Aravena's mother. She told me of her son, a recent honor graduate in medicine of the University of Chile. In mid-December, he and his wife disappeared. The mother learned they were being held incommunicado by the Centro Nacional de Informaciones. Chile's secret police. Some, it is certain, have been cruelly tortured. Under such circumstances, any "confession" must be considered invalid. The Supreme Court verdict came on Jan. 27. The doctors lost their appeal, by votes of 4 to 2 against Dr. Olivares and Dr. Macaya, and 5 to 1 against Dr. Rojas. In a second hearing March 26, charges against Dr. Olivares were upheld. Charges under the terrorism law against Dr. Macaya were voided, leaving him still to face charges under the Arms Control Act. Hernan Felipe Errázuriz, Chilean ambassador to the United States, has said that the Chilean courts were simply applying the law and that Chile has the right to defend its people from the grave threat of terrorism. The fact is that the Chilean government is using the anti-terrorist laws to terrorize its own citizens, committing gross abuses of human rights in clear violation of international law. These Days, Turning Up The Radio Is Not Enough

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — Every Ameri-VV can visitor staying at a Moscow hotel comes back with the same story. You discover the bathroom has no soap. You say loudly and angrily to nobody in particular, "What kind of backward country is this, no soap in the bathroom!" And a few moments later, as if by magic, the chambermaid taps at the door bearing a bar of soap.

The bugging of rooms, like the knowledge of English by drivers who profess to speak not a word of it, is taken for granted by Americans in the Soviet Union. At the 1972 summit meeting, when the "clean room" in the U.S. Embassy was occupied by Henry Kissinger and his aides, a group of Nixon assistants were forced to hold a strategy session on public relations in a Moscow hotel room. Ron Ziegler turned the radio up loud. John Scali rattled his teacup in his sancer. Herb Klein, speaking in a whisper, kept banging his foot against the coffee table. I was supposed to be taking notes at that meeting but could not hear a thing.

Coming back from a Moscow trip, Treasury Secretary George Shultz took his seat in the plane, sighed and remarked how good it was to be able to talk in a different kind of society, free of the fear of being overheard. (I re-member thinking bitterly of that moment when the revelations came of the secret Nixon wiretapping and the White House taping system.)

Now Secretary of State Shultz will be going to Moscow next week more wornied than ever about the security of communications. The U.S. Embassy was penetrated by Mata Hari's greatgranddaughters, and tiny transmitters are suspected of infesting not only the chandeliers and saltshakers but also the typewriters and computers. U.S. diplomats there who used to scoff at demands by hard-liners that Soviet citizens be denied embassy access are now reduced to writing messages in long-hand. Visitors are urged to bring a chil-dren's toy that enables you to write on a slate and make the message vanish by pulling up the plastic covering. Mr. Shultz will have to drive to the airport to use his plane for secure communications with an unpenetrated scrambler.

Even as this rape of America's national privacy takes place, we are told that the new U.S. Embassy building is already compromised with eavesdropping devices. Senator Patrick Leahy, who with Senator Patrick Moynihan led the long fight to enhance embassy security, suggests tearing the whole thing down and starting from scratch. Why does the U.S. government not complain, as it did when the Soviets bombarded the Moscow embassy with radiation and dusted doorknobs with carcinogens? The answer is simple: U.S. agencies try to eavesdrop on their communications everywhere. That takes some of the zing out of American moral indignation.

The Soviets are more careful. Soviet construction men built their new embassy in Washington; their nationals do all the menial chores. What can we Americans do to make certain the Soviets are not stealing more from us than we are from them? Retaliation is an obvious answer: no opening of the en bassy in Washington until a secure U.S. embassy in Moscow is assured.

The less obvious answer has to do with a new strategy of communications security. For a generation, U.S. policy has been to stamp as top secret anything to do with eavesdropping countermeasures. The result has been a good offense and a lousy defense.

When I wrote that the Soviets were using the embassy on Washington's Mount Alto to direct listening-lasers at the White House windows, and that the White House was attaching vibrators to the windows to counter this snooping, a caller suggested that I had breached security. That is nonsense; the Russians can hear American windows rattling, just as they could hear the Scali teacup and the Klein stamping foot.

It is time that U.S. technical publications began speculating about reasons for weakness in the latest anti-bugging technology. Fear of America's anti-espionage laws has not led to security but to suppression of the truth about its weakness.

Americans have a nonexistent defense because they have concentrated on offense. And they have an admin-istration that, in a related field, has adopted a policy of a space shield, which has revolutionized the mad reliance on offense.

Where is the Personal Defense Initiative? Why has the field of resistance to snooping been neglected? Why can't an electronic shield be placed around U.S. embassies? Why can't that technology be used to let Americans of the future protect themselves from unwanted intrusion from any quarter?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Case of Mistaken Identity

I.E. Marsh's identification of Rafael Eitan, the alleged spymaster in the Pol-lard case, as "the former Israeli Army chief of staff" (Leuers, March 31) allowed Mr. Marsh to express certain opinions on the Pollard case. There is. wever, a case of mistaken identity here. The alleged spymaster is not the retired general.

BARUCH HURWICH. Jerusalem.

Eitan is a common Hebrew surname, and Rafael is a common given name. Israelis distinguish between the two Eitans by calling the former chief of staff Raful and the alleged Pollard contact Rafi. The two men are unrelated.

Raful Eitan was not found "indirectly responsible" for the massacre at the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps in 1982. Rather, he was reprimanded for the intelligence failure to foresee the murderous intentions of the perpetrators.

J.E. Marsh confuses different men, and the conclusions he draws from this misidentification are accordingly silly. DORON ARAZI.

UNESCO and the Press

While sharing Jonathan Power's concern over limitations on freedom of the press ("Around the World, a Much-Maigned Press Needs a Champion," April I), I must emphasize that the main thrust of his column reflects two serious oversimplifications. The notion that Third World countries have a monopoly on violations of press freedom ignores the reality of threats to press freedom all over the world and across the ideological spectrum. Second is the inference that the UNES-CO debate on the New Information Order is mainly responsible for the threat against freedom of information. This ignores both the established consensus in UNESCO on communication issues and the fact that the Western nations are strongly advocating at the United Nations that the General Assembly adhere to UNESCO's definition of the New Information Order. This debate is too important to be treated lightly. It is an attempt to bridge the dangerous communication gap between North and South and thus combat prevailing misunderstandings. It is wishful thinking to believe that the main terms of this debate will vanish overnight with a change of leadership at UNESCO. Mr. Power rightly quotes Leonard Sussman, executive director of Freedom House, on the threat to freedom of the press. But he neglects to quote Mr. Sussman's speech at the United Nations of April 12, 1985, when he stated that UNESCO has never approved the licensing of journalists nor supported cen-sorship in any form, and indeed has explicitly opposed it." In its Constitutional Act and in its activities (studies on censorship, self-censorship, and the watchdog role of the press have been undertaken in 20 countries since 1984), UNESCO is committed

DOUDOU DIENE, UNESCO Spokesman.

The Singapore government has not "intimidated and indirectly censored the foreign press," as Mr. Power states. It is the foreign press which has directly censored the Singapore government. (Time magazine has since printed Singapore's letter of correction.)

In "Greenpeace Presses for an Antarctic Park" (Jan. 26), you reported that "the four Greenpeace scientists plan to spend the seven-month-long sunless winter studying lish populations, krill and body heat loss."

I feel they may be better employed brushing up on their basic arithmetic. Cape Evans stands at 77 degrees 38 minutes south latitude, 166 degrees 24 minutes east longitude. At this latitude, by my calculations, the sun should set for winter on April 23 and reappear at the end of the sunless winter on Aug. 21. By no stretch of the imagination can this be regarded as seven months. In fact, it is physically impossible to have a seven-month sunless winter. Even at the South Pole it is only six months of dark and six months of continuous sun.

Moscow's Old City Is Finding A Valuable Ally in 'Glasnost'

By Kathleen Berton-Murrell

Strikingly beautiful as in the days of Napoleon, still offer many delightful old corners and unexpectedly lovely views.

Old Moscow's medieval architects were, after all, geniuses. Now, after a half-century of neglect and destruction, the new Soviet leadership, with tremendous popular support, seems determined not to forget the city's architectural heritage. A recent television documentary began with a wrecking ball smashing into a little 19th-century house, one of many that had flourished in Moscow's old streets. Bricks and plaster flew. The roof collapsed, and the house was soon rubble. The camera switched to bystanders weeping in anger and frustration. · Last summer, an architecture student stood daily near a construction trench on Kuznetsky Most, a main shopping street, entreating passersby to sign a petition to save two stone arches of an 18th-century stone bridge uncovered by the excavation. Finally the Moscow City Council vielded. The arches will be saved and a viewing gallery built around them.

 Every weekend in Moscow, volunteers - 16,000 of them last year - help with restoration projects in the old city. They work hard, mostly hauling rubble and stacking bricks, and then, over tea and biscuits, listen to lectures and debate the fate of old Moscow.

These events, extraordinary in Moscow, are signs of a new concern for preservation and of a more careful asssment of the city's appearance. This partly reflects the new openness encouraged by Mikhail Gorbachev and the dynamic policies of Boris Yeltsin, the first party secretary of Moscow. More fundamentally, it reflects a groundswell of pride by Muscovites in their city.

In the Stalinist period and during the time of huge development projects in the 1960s and 1970s, the public had no voice. A nation dedicated to its future is now, it seems, rediscovering its past.

Moscow once must have been one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Even Napoleon was overwhelmed by its many towers and golden cupolas, its fine neo-classical mansions and its colorful and charmingly asymmetrical churches. Many of those churches and towers survived not only the burst of construction in Moscow at the turn of the century but the early years of communism.

But by 1930, Stalin was firmly in power, and Lazar Kaganovich ruled Moscow as first secretary. Destruction went forward at an unimaginable pace. Medieval forts and monasteries were obliterated to widen streets and build the Metro. Many churches were razed or put to OSCOW — The quiet back streets of old Moscow, although not as strikingly beautiful as in the days of After Stalin's death in 1953, a new restoration program began. But in the late 1950s. Khrushchev began a huge housing program, and many once-pro-tected buildings were torn down.

With Khrushchev's departure, old Moscow got a new reprieve. The Society for the Protection of Monuments was founded; many buildings were saved.

Then, in 1985, Mikhail Gorbachev came to power, bringing tremendous new energy. Within nine months, the Moscow first secretary, Viktor Grishin, and Mayor Vladimir Promyslov — the guiding spirits behind the city's housing. program for 20 years — were replaced Mr. Yeltsin and Valery Saikin, the former boss of the giant Zil auto factory..

Mr. Yelisin, along with Yegor Liga-chev, the Politburo member most concerned with the arts, spoke out in the. 1986 party congress on the need to pre-serve the old center of Russian cities.

Official blessings of preservation have, unleashed pent-up bitterness over the loss of many buildings. News articles' decry the loss of particular buildings. sometimes naming those considered responsible. Respected writers publicly lament the loss of parts of the old city. A. pressure group has developed in favor of rebuilding particular monuments.

Dull functional constructions like the recently completed October Square of the Garden Ring Road are alien to the old center of Moscow, and at last every. one is saying so. There have been proposals that all architectural competiions for buildings in central Moscow beheld openly. The criticism is loud.

Mr. Yeltsin recently announced that the Church of the Ascension, where-Pushkin was married, will (after 10 years of persuasion) be rid of the Energy Ministry and be turned into a concert hall. He also met with young Moscow architects, some of whom opposed a huge war! memorial then under construction; in August, the Politburo decided to half work and open a new competition.

As Mr. Yeltsin told journalists, "The traditional Moscow coziness will be returned to the center of the capital." An old lady who now lives in a modern suburban apartment told a television interviewer recently that she takes every opportunity to return to her beved Sretenka neighborhood.

How, she was asked, could she be nostalgic for the crowded life of a communal apartment? She smiled sadly. What she missed was the charm of the old streets the sense of links with the past.

Amid good weather conditions, the ferry was slowly rolled onto its keel on Monday by a combination of lifting from the cranes and pulling from the winches. The vessel, which remains three-quarters submerged, was then lashed into place as divers and other salvage workers started their search.

The port side of the 7,951-ton ferry, which had been resting on the ocean bottom, showed the marks of a maritime disaster. The white upper decks were scraped and twisted in many places, while several of the vessel's port lifeboats were virtually crushed.

Nets have been placed around the boat to prevent bodies or other objects from floating away. Belgian naval vessels and private barges also are patrolling the area — partly to keep sightseers away, but also to catch any bodies that might slip through the netting.

The salvage operation, organized by the Dutch company Smit Tak, unfolded without any severe difficulties after weeks of preparations. The initial hour or two had been could be torn apart by the pressure

Australia Plans Major Upgrade of Military

Under the plan, contained in a defense policy statement presented to Parliament last month, a substantial part of Australian military firepower will be moved from heavily populated eastern and astern coastal areas to bases in the largely empty north and west of the country.

But Mr. Zhao can point to considerable achievements. According to a World Bank report, from 1979 to 1984, largely as a result of greataccelerated agricultural growth. China's per capita national income grew at nearly 7 percent per year.

The success of the early reforms, which Mr. Zhao hones will propel momentum toward further change, can easily be measured in its effects on people's daily lives.

In rural areas, the decision to allow farmers to make many of their own decisions has unleashed tremendous energies and led to an improvement in living standards for hundreds of millions of people. In the cities, the widespread availability of consumer goods and the ability of many workers to buy them attests to greater affluence.

An official survey conducted last year in more than 100 Chinese cities showed that per capita income in urban areas rose 6 percent last year after inflation. It showed that city dwellers were buying more washing machines, tape recorders, refrigerators and television sets.

A sizable minority of the rural population still lives in extreme poverty. Crowded housing continues to be a major problem in the this improvement in living standards, modest though it may still be, makes China a force for peace and stability. If the changes that nurtured this progress are threatened or slowed down, the world's most-populous country could become a less predictable partner.

The "conservative" leaders at the top levels of the government and party who oppose rapid political and economic change do. however. have many allies in the provinces. And the lack of education and technical abilities among the provincial cadres creates a formidable barrier to change.

In some ways, China's capacity for change has been greater than that of any other Communist country. The Chinese bureaucracy remains a major obstacle to change. but it is probably less deeply entrenched than that of the Soviet Union, where Communist rule was established a generation earlier.

Hungary and Yugoslavia offer the leading examples of how far political change can go these days Taiwan and South Korea show that in a Communist system. Even in Poland today, a degree of political

Chinese economists say generally that while they can learn from mistakes made in Hungary and other East European countries. they do not see enough success in those experiments to offer them a vision of the future. And when the Chinese leaders look at Yugoslavia and see workers striking there, as happened last month, they sense that transferring too much power to workers, or to any other group, can be dangerous. While they see much to admire in Yugoslavia, it is not in the realm of political reform.

Rather, Mr. Deng and other Chinese leaders are looking increasingly toward East Asia for success stories. In their view, the examples of authoritarian regimes such as in economic progress can exist without democratic political reforms.

Pope Urges Reforms To Aid Farm Workers In Argentine Heartland

Pope John Paul II began a tour the Communist Party and more through Argentina's rich agricultural interior on Tuesday with a strong defense of the rights of rural farm workers, saying they had been tremist cells said to be responsible neglected too long.

The pope spoke before a crowd of tens of thousands at a highway intersection outside this port city 380 miles (600 kilometers) south of Buenos Aires.

In Bahia Blanca he concentrated on rural problems, saying the laws of the marketolace often were inhumane and led to salaries that were so low that rural workers could not feed themselves or their families.

John Paul said that a "cloud of inferiority had hung over agricultural workers for too long.

Labor organizations have said that rural workers, isolated and badly organized, have long suffered from low wages, although former President Juan Perón instituted minimum welfare benefits for the previously unprotected workers. The visit was John Paul's first stop in a three-day tour of eight cities in the Argentine interior. He arrived in Buenos Aires on Monday on the last leg of a three-nation tour that already has taken him to Chile and Uruguay.

The pope, who was greeted by President Raul Alfonsin, opened his visit to Argentina by criticizing the doctrine of using violence to defeat violence - a policy of the military government that ruled Argentina from 1976 to 1983.

Rising Hopes and Expectations Add To Problems of Seoul Government

SEOUL - For Chong Youg Hi, a 35-year-old housewife, her country's phenomenal economic growth means an apartment of her own after years of scrimping and living five to a room.

For Suh Hae Sok, a 63-year-old technician, it means the passing of an era when people knew and trusted cach other.

And for a young mother who lives in a half-demolished house on the outskirts of Seoul, it means fighting the wrecking ball as a new housing development threatens to uproot her family.

These are some of the effects, South Korea in so short a time.

In little more than 30 years, an agrarian society has become industrial; a nation of country-dwellers has become urban, and people who once struggled to put enough food on the table now enjoy televisions, refrigerators, and stereos.

But along with prosperity and industrial might. South Korea's economic growth has also created a new set of problems.

While the Korean War left nearly everyone equally poor, now Koreans worry about the gulf between the haves and have-nots - and about the resulting political tensions. Millions of South Koreans have found opportunity in the na-tion's cities, but the urban population explosion has strained resources like housing.

These changes have dramatically altered a way of life that endured in South Korea for thousands of years. While many enjoy the new comforts, they mourn the loss of traditions they held dear.

While such problems are common to many developing countries. the speed and scale of growth and industrialization set South Korea apart. As in Japan, the government has taken a central role in guiding and managing the economy, although the system is essentially capitalistic. But in Japan, the no means a wealthy nation. But the Kims forced him to back down, and reasserted a hard line of settling for nothing other than direct presidential elections.

Although temporarily papered over, the dispute continued to flare. The crisis deepened further as the Kims sought to expel two opposition politicians who openly had declared support for the ruling party's position.

Those two politicians, Lee Chul Sung and Lee Tack Hee, accused the Kims of "manipulating" the party to advance their own ambitions. Finally, on Saturday, more than 200 supporters of the Lees took over party headquarters after a brawl with fellow politicians, and they have been occupying the building ever since.

on Monday. In response to a Kuwaiti request for help in protecting its vessels from Iran, the Reagan administration last month made its offer of direct military protection for Kuwaiti tankers.

But the Kuwait government expressed interest in having both U.S. and Soviet escorts. A Kuwaiti official described the proposal as an effort to avoid the appearance of moving toward either superpower, but U.S. officials were reluctant to cede a Soviet naval role in the region and have been hoping that their offer to protect all Kuwaiti tankers would be accepted.

It was not clear if the transfer of Kuwaiti vessels to Soviet registry would mean Soviet escorts in the Gulf. Knwait has arranged for shore fields in the north of the some Soviet tankers to ship Ku-waterway on Monday.

Effort to Modernize Strains Lenin's 'Golden Rule'

New York Times Service KARAMKEN, U.S.S.R. — When we are victorious on a world scale, I think we shall use gold for the purpose of building public lavatories in the streets of some of the largest cities in the world," Lenin wrote in 1921.

The province also yields silver, tin and tungsten, but mostly gold.

In Siberia, gold is either bull-dozed or dredged from surface gravel deposits known as placers or, as in the case of Karamken, due from deep lode mines. The placers were the first to be mined starting in the 1930s, and as they became played out, the industry has been increasingly blasting into bedrock.

The perfect travelling companions: the jet and the car that's virtually tailor-made for it. First of all, their common qualities. Both accelerate from 0 to 100 km/h in just about the same time. For the BMW 735i that means scarcely 8 seconds.

Both offer their pilot sophisticated and dependable electronic control systems to ensure smooth, troublefree technical operation.

The BMW 7 Series, as the world's first car, and the jet have both been designed and built for maximum reliability using the same computer techniques (FMEA), which eliminate potential problems already at the design stage.

The plane makes distances seem shorter, whilst the large BMW makes short shrift of long journeys, and both have exceptionally aerodynamic bodies.

But there are also differences. The BMW can't quite. match the top speed of the jet but, on the other hand, you never need landing permission with the 735i. That alone makes them a perfectly matching set.

How dared the French monarch allude so grossly to that pious lady's august but hidden extremities?

In general, however, men have found that such rebuffs were risks worth taking, and fine stocking have always been a promising and precious gift. Even when the Reverend William Lee, anxious to alleviate his wife's fatigues as a stocking-knitter, invented the first knitting machine in 1589, the rela-tive value of fine stockings did not go down. Luxury goods they were, and luxury goods they remained.

The present-day stocking industry is just getting back onto its feet after some difficult years. Things looked bleak in the late '60s and early 70s, when jeans became universal attire and interest in women's underwear was equated with a desire for their captivity. But now fine petticoats and sheer hosiery are back, and manufacturers are expanding and modernizing to produce articles to meet practically any whim and occasion.

All hosiery, be it stockings or pantyhose, starts off as a simple knitted tube. These are blown into a bin out of a long plastic proboscis fitted to the face of the knitting machine at the rate of one a minute, or 45 to 50 dozen a day, per machine. Machines such as those produced by the firm Lonati are now completely automatic and can store several programs.

Pantyhose begins to look like pantyhose when it has been through the seaming department, largely manned by robots. Some human collaboration remains. however. A worker pulls the stretchy knitted tubes onto pairs of ready mechanical arms. Swordfishlike snippers then open them from beneath so that the two tubes can be sewn together and trimmed. Next the garment is turned insideout and the toes are sewn. Quality controls ensue, but the process is not yet finished. Dow Off 44.60, Ending Rally

Odd-Lot Trading in N.Y.

"A decline is normal."

NEW YORK -The stock market slid sharply in active trading Tuesday, ending a five-day rally that sent the Dow Jones industrial average to its first close above 2,400.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished the day down 44,60 to 2,360.94.

Declines led advances 1,118-521 among the 1,985 issues crossing the NYSE tape. Big Board volume amounted to about 186.4 million shares, compared with 173.7 million Monday.

Traders said a weak bond market and weakening prices on some stock index futures contracts contributed to selling pressure, particularly at the end of the day. Earlier, the market recouped initial losses

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

For Newly Merged Firms, The Human Factor Counts

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ONDON — Companies that raid and take over others are often portrayed as predators that almost immediately begin getting rid of people. But according to a new study, managers who behave well toward the staff of a company they have taken over are more likely to end up with a successful company than are their more callous counterparts.
"The predator myth gets all the attention," said John W. Hunt, faculty dean and professor of organizational behavior at London Business School, and one of the authors of the study, "Acquisitions: The Human Factor."

ployees from the 40 acquisi-tions studied were asked to leave, he said. In one third of the compa-mes, no director or employee was asked to leave as a result of the takeover, according to the study, which was made by the London Business School and Egon Zehnder International, an executive search firm. According to its authors, the study is the first to look at how managers' behavior affects the outcome of an acquisition. The survey analyzed 40 acquisitions by British companies between 1981 and 1985. Forty-five percent were friendly, 45 percent were partly contested and 10 percent were hostile. The survey asked managers of the acquiring and the acquired company to say whether they considered the business was in better shape" than before the takeover. Where both sets of managers were in complete agreement, the study regarded the takeover as highly successful.

Surprisingly, the report concluded, how well the new managers behaved toward the staff of the acquired company seemed to determine whether the company would be successful, not whether the buyer was more or less experienced at takeovers, was bigger than the seller or had more money, or that the takeover was friendly, hostile or partly contested.

ACCORDING to the study, good management behavior includes honoring promises made before a takeover, giving better wages and career opportunities, and talking to staff at all levels to let them know what will happen to them. In more than half of the acquisitions rated as positive, the buyers lived up to the promises they made before the takeover. Such promises include telling the board and top managers precisely how much control they will retain; honoring existing contracts and conditions of employment and guaranteeing pen-sion arrangements; designating beforehand the people who will be asked to leave and who will stay as a direct result of the takeover; and planning an "honorable disposal" of surplus businesses through management buyonts or redeployment of staff. In 39 percent of the acquisitions regarded as unsuccessful, the new managers did not keep their word.

In two-thirds of the takeovers regarded as positive, managers of the acquired company said they believed they had been given a better deal: They received better performance incentives, better pension plans, better career prospects or they reported the introduction of share options. In two-thirds of the unsuccessful ones, the managers of the acquired company said they thought they were worse off than before the takeover.

How the news gets out about what is going to happen immediately after the takeover is crucial, the report said. In 77 percent of the acquisitions regarded as positive, the chairman of the buyer company went to meet the chairman of the company just acquired. In 58 percent of the unsuccessful cases, there was almost no contact between the two.

Ex-VW Official Is Arrested in Fraud Probe

By Ferdinand Protzman International Herald Tribune
FRANKFURT — The Brunswick prosecutor's office has arrested Burkhardt Junger, former chief foreign exchange dealer at Volkswagen AG, "on urgent suspicion of embezzlement," in connection with allegations of large-scale currency fraud at the giant automaker. It was the first arrest in a widening scandal that has shaken West Germany's financial community, and may leave Volkswagen with losses of as much as 480 million Deutsche marks ($262 million). Mr. Junger, 39, was taken into custody on Sunday, and was arraigned Monday in Brunswick, said Carl Hermann Retemeyer, chief state prosecutor at the Brunswick prosecutor's office. He did not say where the arrest occurred. "There was reason to believe that Mr. Junger might have tried to leave, so the investigating magistrates asked for his arrest," Mr.

Retemeyer said. Currency market experts say the allegedly illegal dealings must have involved at least several persons, inside and outside Volkswagen. Mr. Retemeyer confirmed that the investigation was not over.

"We are still investigating a larger circle of people, including Frankfurt currency dealers," Mr. Retemeyer said. West German state attorneys are also waiting to question Joachim Schmidt, manager of a Frankfurt-based foreign exchange brokerage, who vanished the day before news of Volkswagen's problems broke.

But Mr. Retemeyer said there were no arrest orders or indictments against Mr. Schmidt or other possible accomplices, at the moment. Mr. Retemeyer would not say whether other arrests were expected.

"With the worldwide coverage Volkswagen has gotten from this, I doubt Mr. Schmidt is hurrying to return to Germany," said a Brunswick prosecutor.

Volkswagen announced the alleged fraud and the possible losses on March 10. Until that time, the company had repeatedly denied rumors of large foreign exchange cy trading operations, which had circulated in West German financial markets for several months.

The company said computer data bases were erased and programs altered in 1984, as part of the alleged fraud, which also involved lorged foreign currency forward contracts. Companies use these contracts to protect themselves against currency fluctuations. The disclosure was followed quickly by a management shake-up at Volkswagen, in which Mr. Junger and Rolf Selowsky, the managing board member in charge of finance, lost their jobs. Six other members of the finance department were suspended.

Mr. Junger said in late March he by Volkswagen with the labor court of the Brunswick district, and would sue the automaker for "a couple of million marks" in dam-

After the management shuffle, which ended a feud between Volkswagen's managing board chairman, Carl H. Hahn, and Mr. Selowsky, there was a flurry of allegations that Volkswagen's top managers learned of the suspected fraud much earlier than they have publicly admitted.

Volkswagen's managers contend their first indications of possible wrongdoing came on Feb. 18, when a dollar forward contract was presented to National Bank of Hungary, which said it had no record or knowledge of the contract. Joachim Schmidt & Partner KG had been known to act as a broker for Na-tional Bank of Hungary.

The news of Mr. Junger's arrest may mute questions about the competence of Volkswagen's managers, and provide a boost for Mr. Hahn, according to West German stock market sources. Many observers believe his job is on the line.

"The company claimed from the beginning that it was hurt by criminal actions, rather than mismanagement," said an equities analyst in Frankfurt. This backs up that contention. Whether management acted properly or not is less of an

Bond Ruling Rattles Texaco Suppliers

By Thomas C. Hayes

New York Times Service
DALLAS - Some suppliers of Texaco inc. say they are con-cerned that the third-largest U.S. oil company may file for protection following Monday's Supreme Court ruling that it must appeal an $11 billion bond reirement in the Texas state

The bond requirement, which had been reduced to $1 billion by a U.S. appeals court, was imposed when Texaco lost a court decision to Pennzoil Co. in 1985. Under Texas law, Pennzoil is entitled to place liens on Texaco property unless Texaco posts security in the full amount of the indement in the case while the case is being appealed. However, a lawyer for Texaco said he was hopeful that Texaco and Pennzoil would be able to reach an agree-

$11 billion or $12 billion. [On Tuesday, Texaco filed in the First Court of Appeals in Texas to enjoin the enforcement of the bond requirement. Reuters reported, quoting John Jeffers, an attorney for Pennzoil.

[Mr. Jeffers said the filing contained a request to cut the amount of the bond to between $1 billion and $1.5 billion.] Unless the bond question is re-

Texaco, which had $34.9 billion in assets at the end of 1986, would be by far the largest American company ever to enter bankruptcy proceedings. It reported a net worth of $13.7 billion at the end of the year, with $6.9 billion of long-term debt.

Texaco's shares, after falling $4 on Monday, were up 12.5 cents at closing Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange, to $33.75.

The market value of all Texaco stock, now totaling $8.1 billion, would be expected to fall dramatically if the company filed for protection because the interests of Texaco's thousands of creditors would be placed ahead of the stockholders in any reorganiza-tion plan. South Korea Shipyards

Report Rise in Orders Agence France-Presse SEOUL — South Korean ship-yards received orders for 25 ships valued at a total of $552 million in the first quarter of this year, up from five orders valued at $130 million a year earlier, the Korea Shipbuilders' Association said Tuesday.

It said the increase was due to the appreciation of the Japanese yen, which reduced the competi-tiveness of Japanese shipyards.

Volcker Says Dollar's Fall Is Threat to Growth

than 30 percent against the Deutsche mark and the yen in 18 months, but this has done little to reduce the U.S. merchandise-trade deficit, which totaled $14.8 billion in January.

Mr. Volcker said that relving solely on the falling dollar to reduce the deficit "would clearby hold substantial risks of renewed inflationary momentum and undermine confidence in future financial stability." He said this "could jeopardize prospects for sustained economic expansion." Mr. Volcker noted that as exports from Europe and Japan are slowing, growth there is declining. "In that kind of situation, further sizable depreciation of the dollar could well be counterproductive," he said.

Meanwhile, the Dutch finance minister, H. Onno Ruding, who is chairman of the International Monetary Fund's policy-making Interim Committee, said in Washington he believed the dollar had fallen far enough. (Reuters, AP)

Foreign Banks Taking Cooler Look at German Operations limit bank lending to 18 times shareholders'

FRANKFURT --- Foreign banks in West Germany are reassessing their positions after changes in the markets and the regulatory environment have dampened enthusiasm for expansion here.

Banking sources said the most important changes were plans to bring securities holdings into capital-lending ratios, the first such move in a major financial center. This could hurt several foreign banks, particularly those active in primary and secondary bond markets. Foreign banks have much lower equity and reserve capital than most domestic banks.

Senior banking sources said talks between the Bundesbank and the banking supervisory office over bringing securities, primarily bonds, under banking laws governing capital ratios

Although no date had been set for imposition of the change, banks as early as this year may be obliged to bring bonds under 1985 rules that

Brian Kissack, president of the Foreign Banks Association, said, "It's not a positive sign. It could cause certain people who are not in" West Germany "to query whether it was as attractive to get in now.

Larger banks may begin to use global networks to pass on holdings in Deutsche markdenominated securities to other centers with less stringent ratios, he added.

But sources said foreign banks faced other practical problems as well. These include: • The apparent unwillingness of the Bonn vernment to make an early move to abolish he stock exchange turnover tax.

• Signs that London's "Big Bang" may have deeper implications for German securities trad-ing than first thought.

• Difficulty in finding experienced securities professionals to staff new subsidiaries.

The tax is 0.25 percent on each side of a securities trade by a nonbank, but it is not levied on public authority bonds.

This extra cost, particularly for such finely priced instruments as floating rate notes, had kept much trading of mark-denominated securities business in the City of London.

Large U.S., British, Japanese and Swiss investors often have preferred to execute block trades of 50,000 shares and up with City market makers who could absorb at least some of the paper in their own positions, diminishing the amediate impact on the share price. Most German brokers and banks pass trades directly to the exchange floor, cutting profits or adding to costs.

A board member of Bank in Liechtenstein (Frankfurt), Michael Zapl, said that London's share of the German securities was causing By leaving the stock exchange turnover tax foreign banks without German branches to out of the initial negotiating session of the new question whether the return justified the cost.

AIRBUS: Shelving of Engine Puts Jet's Future in Doubt

ket, the plane's future also depends on a decision by the consortium's four member governments, West Germany, France, Britain and Spain, to authorize an estimated $4.5 billion in development fund-

"This is a terrible embarrassment to everyone concerned," said an investment banker in Paris. "It involves everyone from IAE to the airlines and ultimately to Airbus, which had sold airlines on the Su-

Paul Nisbel, who follows the aerospace industry for Prudential-Bache Securities in New York, said the IAE cancellation had put the A-340's future in jeopardy because its attraction to potential buyers rest-

Baker Debt Plan Assailed at Talks

United Press Interv WASHINGTON - Devel oping nations meeting here for conferences of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund have staked out a position against the plan offered 18 months ago by the U.S. Treasury secretary, James A. Baker 3d, to resolve Third World debt

A working paper by ministers for 24 of those nations said the initial approach to the world debt crisis, "instead of providing debtor countries with adequate resources to allow them to strengthen and restructure their productive capacities, has required the economies of debtor countries to generate outward transfers of resources."

N. Y. 10022 Reviewed by Florence King

MANY years ago when a woman in a lecture aiddience asked Ambrose Bierce for advice on child raising, he replied: "Study Herod, madam, study Herod." Bierce's irascible shade must be jumping for joy over "The Propheteers," Max Apple's new satire featuring motel and restaurant tycoon Howard Johnson; Margery Post Merriweather (whose father invents breakfast cereal), and the Pied Piper himself, a suicidal Walt Disney electrocuting children at the gates of a new theme park

Apple uses both real and made up charac-ters, acknowledging in an author's note that "my only real connection to the real names" used in this novel is the frequent appearance of a number of them at my breakfast table."

At any rate, Apple's allegory opens in Johnson's car. The inventor of all those flavors of ice cream is driving around the country inspecting his orange-topped hostels with his devoted amanuensis Milly Bryce, who is dying of bleeding nicers. Because death is unacceptable, Milly has decided on cryonic preserva-tion. The paternal Johnson buys her a bright orange freezer trailer and hooks it up to the

They are headed for Orlando, Florida where Walt Disney plans to build another of his kiddy worlds. But Howard Johnson wants to build Johnsonworld in Orlando, a restful theme park with all-natural rides that will soothe America's waking moments as his motels have soothed their sleep.

The land both men want belongs to the fabrilously rich Margery Post Merriweather. Now a very old lady, the childless Margery is appalled by the prospect of an amuse park in her back yard. Since every Disney extravaganza features a wicked old with, she decides to cast herself in the role. Calling in security guards to wire her front gates and a fleet of lawyers that she installs in her house, she announces her intention to do everything in her power - and that includes using the

eonard Defeats Hagler on Split Decision

By William Gildea Washington Past Service

LAS VEGAS - Sugar Ray Leonard made boxing history Monday night.

In one of the most improbable victories in the history of the sport, the former welterweight champion made good on his prophecy of a victorious comeback, scoring a 12-round split decision over the heavifavored Marvelous Marvin Hagler, who had not lost in 11 years and who had held the middleweight title since September 1980. The ninth round brought the crisis that could have turned the fight for Hagler. Against the ropes, Leonard elected to continue working inside against Hagler and got caught with four left hands that might have sent a lesser man down.

Instead, Leonard came back to fight a light-heavyweight bout, slugging in a round reminiscent of the first round in the Hagler-Hearns fight of two years ago. Toeto-toe, Leonard and Hagler produced one of the great rounds in boxing history. At its end, Leonard swaved as he headed for his corner. Davis Leads Reds to 11-5 Victory in Opener

Compiled by Our Staff From Despatches CINCINNATI - The largest regular-season baseball crowd in Riverfront Stadium history witessed a phenomenon that has been predicted all spring - the ance of Eric Davis.

The Cincinnati Reds crushed the Montreal Expos, 11-5, on opening day Monday, with Davis providing a resume of his skills. The 24-yearold center fielder went 3-for-3 (including a home run), walked twice, stole two bases, scored two runs and drove in three runs.

A crowd of 55,166, which had started to boo when the Reds fell behind 4-0 after two innings, went vild as the home team turned a 5-2 deficit into an 11-5 advantage with a nine-run fourth inning.

And Davis was at the heart of it.

He reached base twice in the fourth, stealing second base twice and scoring two runs, Davis opened the Reds' biggest inning in nearly two years with a walk off starter and loser Floyd Youmans; he stole second, took third on a groundout and scored on a single by Bo Diaz. Terry Francona, a former Expo who went to Cincinnati's spring training camp as a free agent, followed with a towering two-run homer to right that tied the score, 5-5. Ron Oester walked and scored on a double by Paul O'Neill. Kal Daniels singled off Bill Campbell to bring home O'Neill. and Barry Larkin delivered a two-run homer.

Dave Parker kept the inning go-ing with a double and scored on Davis's single off Andy McGaffigan. Davis stole second, took third on a groundout and scored on a

"That particular inning was my time, but we've got eight guys who contribute," Davis said. "All the hitters are tough on this team."

Too bad for UEFA that the billion-lire Real Madrid vs. Juventus draw came in bleak midwinter; aficionados have no complaint about Bayera Munich now locking horns against Real Madrid. The winner should celebrate a spring finale featuring the real class of '86, Dynamo Kiev. That is unless FC Porto fails to read the script and knocks off Kiev in the semis.

The Cup Winners' Cup is a nicely unpredictable job lot: Real Zaragoza of Spain vs. Ajax of Amsterdam and Bordeaux trying to win a first major-club trophy for France against Lokomotiv Leipzig.

But the UEFA Cup harbors real shoestring success. IFK Göteborg, having sold goal-scorer Johnny Ekstrom to the modest Italian club Empoli, is nevertheless again a semifinalist after eliminating the wealthier Inter Milan. Göteborg now meets Swarovski Tirol, a small club heavily backed by industrial

Soup and Sunflowers

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — Yes, I am the secret purchaser who paid $40 million for one of van Gogh's sunflower paintings, and not one of his best either, they tell me. Any other Question: Are you a collector? Answer: Not anymore. I used to collect corporations until Lou Harris took a poll. It showed everybody thinks corporation collectors are parasites, so I quit.

Q: You sacrificed a lucrative hobby rather than offend the decent minion of mankind?

A: Easy there, fella. You think I'm weird or something? Let public opinion bother you and you'll never get rich enough to blow forty mil on the works of the old Dutch daubers. But when money's no fun. who needs it? And it's no fun being a parasite.

Q: Is buying a van Gogh more fun than buying an oil company? A: You bet your sweet patootie it is. When I crushed the van Gogh competition everybody at the auction applauded. When you buy a big chunk of the microchip industry, all you get is investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commis-

Q: We are told that because of the painting's great value and in-credible insurance costs, you will ce costs, you will have to keep it in a secret vault where it will never be seen again.

A. That's silly. Didn't I just finish telling you money's for fun?

Q: You will display it?
A: Sure. It's hanging right now in the powder room, a fun place to keep it Imagine what happens: I get a few friends in, they get a little smashed, somebody says where's the powder room and I say right over there. Can you imagine the

Q: Sure: guy's in the powder room, starts to comb his hair, finds himself staring into the van Gogh and thinks, boy, I've heard of boozers seeing snakes, but looking into the mirror and finding you've turned into a sunflower beats snakes hands down. Is that the level of fun intensity you expect for your $40 million? A: Of course not. What really happens is, this old friend goes into the powder room and a second later busts out screaming: "Oh, you devil, you! So you're the secret buyer who paid the king's ransom for

Q: Then you see the van Gogh as conversation piece to enliven tedious evenings with old friends who baven't had anything refreshing to say to each other in years? Isn't there a serious flaw in your scheme?

O: At one time or another everybody in the world has owned a reproduction of van Gogh's sunflowers. Mine, purchased at the Safeway in 1959, hung in a bathroom often frequented by guests, none of whom ever said anything about it more interesting than, "Can't you find anything but those trite old van Gogh staffowers for the bathroom

A: Namely?

A: True, sometimes friends break your heart. Buying another painting will cheer me up.

Q: Then you intend to collect nother great painting?

A: Only if the price is newsworthy. It's no fun buying paintings at prices that don't make the front

Q: You have a particular painting in mind, or will anything do as long as it costs more than $40 million? A: I'm dying for an Andy War-hol soup can, but Warhol prices aren't up there in the fun range yet. Q: You'd go as high as $40 mil-lion for a soup can if you could get another secret potential buyer to bid against you in a media thriller at Sotheby's? A: I think it would take $50 million to get the real fun media

Q: Then, as the secret owner of two paintings, one a flawlessly accu-rate rendering of a soup can and one the product of an artist whose work was deemed worthless in his own time, both valued, thanks to you, at $90 million, you would face a baffling puzzle. How can you preserve the secret of your ownership of these two fantastically overpriced

A: I've already solved that. Q: Yes?

A: By cutting out van Gogh's sunflowers and sticking them in Warhol's soup can, I can deceive the shrewdest art thief. Is that fun or is that fun, and if it isn't, so what? Money has its privileges,

Kurt Sanderling, Composer's Advocate

By Barbara Bell STRASBOURG — When Kurt Sanderling reached 65, he retired as permanent conductor of the Berlin Symphony Orchestra after a 46-year career in East Germany and the Soviet Union because he feared he might soon start losing his musical touch and he didn't want colleagues feeling too sorry for him to ask him to go. Sanderling, now 74, smiles and shakes his head as he says this. He is still based in East Berlin but nine years after his "retirement" he travels the world as a guest conductor, invited and invited back by orchestras large and small, mostly in the West. Tonight he will conduct the London Philharmonic Orchestra at Royal Festival Hall in Bruckner's Seventh Symphony and, with James Galway as soloist, Mozart's First Flute Concer-

Kurt Sanderling: "A conductor has no reason to be proud, only a composer."

1990, including three or four long as orchestras invite me and I tra," music that he himself may ever, recorded extensively, with weeks each season with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, at four am able physically to do the work. I am enjoying music more and more, the more I play." concerts a week - the standard pace of the big American orches-

The music he plays now is only the music he enjoys.

Born in 1912 in East Prussia,

Sanderling became an assistant conductor at the Berlin Staatsoper at 19, then fled Nazi Germany as a Jewish refugee. In the Soviet Union, he found work with the Moscow Radio Orchestra and then with the Leningrad Philharmonic, with which he stayed for 19 years before returning to East Berlin to take over the newly formed Berlin Symphony Orches-tra in 1960 and lead it for the next 17 years.

A permanent conductor, Sanderling points out, sometimes has to play music that is "necessary for the cultural life of a town, by a local composer, for example, or plan to retire from conducting "as for the development of his orchesnot especially like.

When he reached 65. Sanderling promised himself that for the rest of his life he would limit his conducting to music that he personally considers to be great, works with which he feels a deep

So he plays Schubert, Schumann. Brahms ("I am always in the mood to do Brahms"), Mahler, Bruckner, Mozart ("my favorite, but I think he is the favorite of all musicians"), Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn ("a very great composer, whom I play as a modern composer, not as 'Papa' Haydn"), Sibelius — but not all works by all of them, only the ones he likes "very much," with the emphasis on a strongly rolled ver-ry. Recording he dishkes in principle, preferring the immediacy of live music-making. He has, how-major projects including the complete Brahms symphonies with the Dresden Staatskapelle and Beethoven symphonies with the Philharmonia Orchestra in London. His Tchaikovsky and Sibe-lius symphonies with the Berlin Symphony have been issued on moact discs.

"Music-making is a thing of the moment and when this moment isn't present, you lose the music," he says. "The conductor is working for the present time. Conductors have to live honestly while they are alive. After is not so im- an autograph. portant. It is the composers who must live.

The conductor has to become the composer who is showing and playing his work. I am standing there before the orchestra instead of the composer, to show his life and have done some things that were better, some worse and some that were frankly bad. A conductor has no reason to be proud, only a composer," he says.

Orchestras tend to respond energetically to Sanderling's ap-

"We like him very much. He is very demanding but he is a very sincere and profound musician," said Amiram Ganz, concertmaster of the Strasbourg Philharmonic. "He shares with us a deep, sometimes literary, concept of the work and he commits himself to the music with his whole person-

"Every concert is a new pleasure and a new battle for me, wherever and whatever I am playing." Sanderling says.

So convinced is he of the difficulties of his profession that he says he tried to discourage his three sons from following in his footsteps. Without much success," he adds. As he speaks, Thomas, 44, a conductor who left the East four years ago and now lives in West Germany, is rehearing a new production of "Don Giovanni" in Graz, Austria. Stefan, 22, studies conducting in Leipzig. Michael, 20, studies cello at East Berlin's Hochschule für Musik, where Sanderling's second wife, Barbara, a musician in her 40s who plays the double bass with the Berlin Octet, is a teacher. At the moment, Michael is in Barcelona at a cello competition and has just telephoned his father with the news that he has reached the secand round. In his dressing room after being applauded at length by both musicians and audience here for a performance of Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Sanderling is visited by several enthusiastic elderly women.

"Wunderbar, wunderbar," one says, holding out her program for Smiling, one hand to his heart, Sanderling replies, "I didn't write it, I only conducted it." He signs the program and re-turns it with a slight bow. "For Schumann," he says.
